José Luis Aróstegui is Professor at University of Granada--Spain--, Music Education at the University of Granada. His formal training is in Western classical music, education and qualitative research. During 2001-2003, he held a postdoctoral fellowship sponsored by the Ministry of Education of Spain at the University of Illinois, USA. He has presented papers at a number of international conferences (e.g., AERA, ISME, AEA) and published papers in international journals (e.g., IJME, BCRME, AEPR) and publishing companies (e.g., Routledge, OUP, Sense). He was appointed by the European Commission to co-ordinate a major evaluation of Music Teacher Education Programmes in Europe and Latin America (2004-2008). He has also led a research project sponsored by the Spanish Government about the role of women at the Spanish school system (2008-2011). At the moment he is the IP of the research project about "The Impact of School Music Education for the Knowledge Economy and Society in Spain", sponsored by the Spanish Government as well (2015-2018). He has served as a commissioner of the Music in Schools and Teacher Education Commission (MISTEC), a part of the International Society of Music Education (ISME), from 2004 to 2010, being the Commission Chair for the two last years of that period. He has also been member of the ISME Board of Directors (2012-2016) and Editor of the Revista Internacional de Educación Musical journal (2013-2018).
